harbor was a disheartening contrast to the shimmering green and white that fringed the turquoise bay of Barbados which was her home. The earthen wall of the fortification that faced the river was bare and ugly, and the houses beyond were no more than plain wooden boxes.

“Is that Wethersfield?” she inquired instead.

“Oh, no, Wethersfield is some way up the river. This is the port of Saybrook. Home to us Eatons. There’s my father’s shipyard, just beyond the dock.”

“Just the little pinnaces in the islands. I’ve sailed on those all my life.”

He nodded. “That’s where you learned to keep your balance.”

So he had noticed! To her pride, she had proved to be a natural sailor. Certainly she had not spent the voyage groaning and retching like some of the passengers.

“You’re not afraid of the wind and the salt, anyway. At least, you haven’t spent much time below.”

“Not if I could help it,” she laughed. Did he think anyone would stay in that stuffy cabin by choice? Would she ever have had the courage to sail at all had she known, before she booked passage, that the sugar and molasses in the hold had been paid for by a load of Connecticut horses,

Color Knitting

One of the most enjoyable aspects of knitting can be choosing the colors—standing in the yarn shop, holding one ball of yarn next to another to see how they work together. You can use color in your knitting to create beautiful, vibrant designs using several methods: simple horizontal striping; Fair Isle knitting, which involves the stranding of two colors in one row; slip-stitch color knitting, which is a deceptively easy way to create elaborate color patterns; and intarsia knitting, which involves the use of bobbins to create isolated blocks of color. Color choice can play a less important role when you need to showcase a special stitch pattern, or suit a particular style. Take your time when choosing colors, and look to this chapter to learn ways to integrate them into your projects.

Chapter One

My head downcast, I slinked into the conference room, and my boss Sheila Gaspar stopped speaking. I cringed as her glare tracked me to my usual chair, the round table not putting enough space between us. I sat down, acting as if my tardy arrival was no big deal. My coworkers, even Sheila, overslept, too; I wanted to remind the smug bunch. I'd also stopped at my bank, but I'd never bring up my trip there.

My eyes refused to acknowledge the sidelong glances darted my way. Give it a few minutes, and their idle amusement would fade. She'd been reviewing the day's schedule for our next software release. The code written in C++ programming language was Greek to me. Sheila castigated me, her crushed glass voice grating on my ears.

"Jonas, how nice you deigned to join us," she said.

Said to be golden; silence, even the sullen variety, constituted my best defense.

"Did you forget what time our weekly team meeting starts?" she asked.

I ignored their furtive smirks. Me getting raked over the coals was a richer source of entertainment than the job was. I'd get the final laugh, however, since I carried the safe deposit box keys used to open my riches while they'd always toil away as IT drones. A deferential shrug, hangdog look, or apologetic murmur was how I'd always patched up my rifts with Sheila, but this time felt different. A trace of snickers and guffaws flittered around the conference table.

"That issue will be addressed later," she said. "I'm in the middle of reviewing the release day's itinerary. You'll have to get it from somebody else since I'm not repeating what I've covered."

My glance at her a cursory one, I nodded once.

Satisfied for now, she resumed where she'd left off, but her words failed to register. Menacing fear said I might be at my last staff meeting. Had my string of second chances fizzled out? No grander way capped off a lousy morning than getting handed a pink slip. I'd return to the Chez Blades and pop a frosty can of PBR to kick back and bask in the splendor of my woes.

Then Amy's cell phone acted up. Nonchalant, she reached into her purse and squelched the shrills. Nobody reacted with lands. A few efforts to grow truck and oranges are known to have been failures. It is generally believed that the scrub is colder at night, and that frosts are liable to occur over these areas when they do not occur over the high pine land. There is no apparent reason for this, however, in the topography of the country."

Professor Whitney finds no chemical or physical difference in the soils which would account for the diverse vegetation, and is driven to the conclusion that "the only explanation for the difference in the character of the vegetation is that it is accidental, and that the one kind of crop or the other received a start and simply spread, the two kinds of vegetation not being capable of growing together." This is an explanation which does not explain, and we are not inclined to accept it as a final word.

ERWIN F. SMITH.

Forests of Wisconsin.¹—Those who are interested in the forestry problems of this country will desire to read this report from cover to cover. It is written by a competent forester. It deals with the past and present forest conditions of the so-called pineseries of Wisconsin, i.e., the northern half of the state. It is based on personal explorations and on data furnished by trustworthy lumbermen. To obtain the materials for this report Mr. Koth visited every county in the district, making a careful study of its forest cover. When one considers the infinitude of details involved in such a survey, the wonder is that the author has been able to represent things so clearly. No one can read this report without feeling that the work has been well done, or without wishing that Michigan and other pine-woods states might set on foot similar surveys. Unless something of this kind is done, either by the states or by the general government, we shall never know where we are in the matter of timber supply, or fully

Appalachian Gateway : An Anthology of Contemporary Stories and Poetry

by Brosi, George; Egerton, Kate

Featuring the work of twenty-five fiction writers and poets, this anthology is a captivating introduction to the finest of contemporary Appalachian literature. Here are short stories and poems by some of the region's most dynamic and best-loved authors: Barbara Kingsolver, Ron Rash, Nikki Giovanni, Robert Morgan, Lisa Alther, and Lee Smith among others. In addition to compelling selections from each writer's work, the book includes illuminating biographical sketches and bibliographies for each author. These works encompass a variety of themes that, collectively, capture the essence of Appalachia: love of the land, family ties, and the struggle to blend progress with heritage. Readers will enjoy this book not just for the innate value of good literature but also for the insights it provides into this fascinating area. This book of fiction is an enlightening companion to non-fiction overviews of the region, including the Encyclopedia of Appalachia and A Handbook to Appalachia: An Introduction to the Region, both published by the University of Tennessee Press in 2006. In fact the five
